Artist's Statement

"My subject matter uses nature as a jumping off point, but is not fully representational. I enjoy playing with movement, light and shadow and often view nature as a vehicle to express emotion. Though watercolors can be unforgiving, they also allow for spontaneity, vibrancy and immediacy. I occasionally add ink and charcoal for emphasis and to accentuate movement."

Patricia is a native Chicagoan who is now a proud Northwest settler. She studied art at the American Academy of Art in Chicago, and after graduation went on to a career as an Art Director. She's still working in the ad industry, but in the last several years she's been exploring painting again, and has found joy in rediscovering art. In the last several years, Patricia has shown her work at Cafe Senso in Seattle and at local art walks on Bainbridge Island and Poulsbo.
